Atkinson's Saturday Evening Post

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER, DEVOTED TO LITERATURE, SCIENCE, MORALITY, NEWS, AGRICULTURE AND AMUSEMENT.

Vol. XV. PHILADELPHIA, APRIL 2, 1836. Whole No. 766.

Theatre Royal, Portland.

The theatre royal, Portland, is a handsome edifice, situated in Middle street, and was opened for the season on the 1st of December, 1835, by Mr. Simpson, late of the Chatham theatre, New York. The interior is fitted up in a neat and tasteful manner, and the stage is of sufficient dimensions to produce the most splendid pieces. The company is a good one, and the performances are conducted with much spirit. The theatre is open every evening, except Saturday.

A LEGEND.

BY WILLIAM C. BRYANT.

Upon a rock that lifts its head
Above the mountain's boastful brood,
A warrior hunter of the dead
Hath set him down to rest,
And hearkened, for the well-known cry,
His hound should bear and mercy lend.

All day on hope the mountains lay,
While the dun eagle screamed
And every glimmering on their way
The wolves and panthers fled.
While o'er them a mourning sound
Of wonder-stricken forests went around.

He listened, till he seemed to hear
The rush and hurry of the chase,
That whether in the mind of one,
Or in the world around,
Or in the realm of shadows, known
Was nothing true to warrior's soul.

He looked, and found the sunlight fled afar,
And all the mountain tops,
And all the gorges dim and dark,
And grew beneath his gaze
As if the dusky veil of night
Had gathered into wingless air.

Gross fear loomed on he looked, and flowers
Of the dim night did wander by,
And fountains sealed beneath the showers,
And streams that sang aloud,
He saw the glittering stream, he heard
The rushing of the springing flood.

And sounds—the dead—no hoofbeat dear,
And shapes—the dead—no more—
And there was one who many a year
Had been his mate in toil,
And strong girl, the queen's stallions,
Had been his pride and joy.

Bounding, as was her wont, she came
Right down the hoary steep,
And seemed to look with human eye his name,
With sweet and soothing love,
The form he missed, in act to rise.

Then all was changed, and nothing down
Plunged from that craggy wall;
He saw the wolves and panthers brown,
As ancient, in his lair.
And all the mountain was the same—
The dawn and the close silence there.

LETTERS FROM AFRICA.

BY THOMAS CAMPBELL.

LETTER V.

The population of the states of Algiers, and of all the Regency that are actually governed by Turkish rulers, has been estimated at three millions, including a small number of souls, exclusive of the Moorish and Arabian tribes, who live in a state of independence in the interior. Hazarden, Mount Atlas, and the kingdom of Algiers have been both a subject of interest to the learned, and a source of information to the busy world. The competence in the latter case, as it would seem that England, Spain and France have been contending for the honour of their respective consuls, and that each country has been giving the preference to its own. In the former case, the interest has been confined to the learned, and the information to the few

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

We have before us a number of new publications, lately received from Philadelphia and New York publishers.

From Carey, Lea & Blanchard we have received Agnes De Mansfeldt, a historical tale, by Thomas Colley Grattan, author of "Highways and Byways," and several other popular novels; and The Elements, by R. M. de, being a not for treatise on Astronomy, Grattan's new work as highly recommended by the leading English critics, and the few chapters we have been enabled to read, have left a very favorable impression, as to its style and power of the author. The treatise on the Heavens, is a deeply interesting production.

From Carey & Hart, we have the Novel Sketch Book, by the author of "Tales of a Tar," and Random Recollections of the House of Commons. The first is an admirable sketch of the incidents and adventures of a connected with our service, and is brought up to us to be delightfully interesting in a landsman; and the second is a well written sketch of all the leading members of the British House of Commons. From this book we make a short extract, exhibiting the degree of disorder which sometimes prevails in wellorganized legislative bodies.

A Scene in the House of Commons.—I shall allude to one more scene of the kind, but equally towards the close of last session. An Hon. Member, whose name I cannot recollect, now amidst the most tremendous uproar to address the House. He spoke, and was received as nearly as the noise would allow him to judge as follows:—"I rise sir,—(musical clarets, mingled with the sound of prolonged bellowing, as if for the purpose of stating that I have—) oh! oh! Ha! And sounds resembling a bleating of sheep, mingled with loud laughter.) Hon. Gentlemen may endeavour to put me down by their unanimity in interruptions, but I have a duty to perform to my constituents, sir, and, loud coughing, sneezing, and yawning, extended to an incredible length, followed by bursts of laughter.) I say, Sir, that I am conscious who on this occasion so exhibit that I—(cries of 'shame' and groans, and shouts of laughter.) I say, sir, that on a question of such importance—(Hooting, and laughter, followed by cries of 'Order! order' from the Speaker.) I tell Hon. Gentlemen, who are so disorderly, that I am in order to say, that I am not to be put down by—groans, coughs, sneezing, hems, and whatever animal sounds, a crew of which nearly surround the subject of a dog, and the squeaking of a pig, interspersed with peals of laughter.) I repeat (one cock-a-doodle-doo!) The sensation in the case, of the crowing of a cock, was so remarkably good, that not even the most staid and orderly of Members in the House could preserve their gravity. The Speaker which bellowed down the Speaker's cries of "order, order."

"I say, Sir, this is most unbecoming conduct on the part of an assembly calling itself dom'l (I beg your pardon, and burst of laughter.) I say I only have Hon. Gentlemen, who should be more sober and orderly in their conduct, to thank for the interruption of the Chair. (The Speaker here again rose and called for 'order, order,' in a loud and angry tone, in which he appeared to assume concern and anger.) If Honorable Gentlemen will only allow me to make one observation, I will not trespass further on their attention, but I am not to be put down." (The cock crowing, and tremendous cheering in chorus.) I only beg to say, Sir, that I think from the noise, and the sound of universal nonsense and will therefore vote against the Hon. Gentleman's motion.

The above will be sufficient to convey an idea of the whole disdoning applause.

The Papers have sent us Rosemond, with other stories, by Maria Edgeworth, and The Club Book, being original tales, by a number of the New England writers, in promising which no readers writer has been more successful than Maria Edgeworth. The stories are interesting in ch ld and not less so to grown

HOOD'S COMIC ANNUAL, FOR 1836.

The Proud Spinsters.

Our next and last comic song is the work from one of the "Sketches on the Road." The principal figure is a proud spinster, all pedigree, and poverty, and poor pride; ignorant, indeed, it is said of her, that she had declared something of the kind to the Duchess of Kent, when the latter called her for other than a landing favour. The Proud Spinsters are the Misses Bell, who, for the one lower end and sixpence, will, whilst it, the set of mistakes of her own and others'.

A recent Absentee another has described as an essential attribute of high birth and breeding in England, a certain sort of easiness and negligence in all common-place consequences, such as an alarm of the house on fire, or a man falling into a fit by one's side. Of this, the Misses Bell of old contrasted which Poor Grimp in a lady who is ignorance of Hamlet's Ghost, and Mr. Bell, in the midst of the confusion of Mount Vesuvius's eruption. Only let Miss Norman's name be mentioned, though her birth-fall. She did was indeed, as she was, on her head out of the window, to see what was the matter; but her head out of the window, to see what was the matter; but she only subjected herself to more scarcity in the matter of the next, than to have her upright, and fixed her eyes on the back of the coach-box, in his proper Hessian boots.

If you please, Ma'am, Harry-first he dead. The lady supposed it was the coachman or groom, and

"I've took off the collar, and the bit out, and gee'ee out o' harness entirely; but he is so cantankerous and so ill-natured, and the information looked extremely at the lady to observe that the collar, and the bit out, and gee'ee out of harness entirely,
